Monument to General Jackson.

The following cloquent address to the people of the United States, says the editor of the Washington Union, supersedes the necessity of any elaborate appeal from our own pen. We go for the object it proposes, heart and hand. It is a due respect to the me- friends of the enterprise, inasmuch as it will save the mory of one of the first men, not only of his coun- expens a incident to collection try, but of his age - a patriot whose services have seed a never-dying lustre upon our military fame and upon our civil institutions-whose death has covered a whole nation with mourning, and drawn from the lips of almost countless orators the warm eulogium which is due to his services and merits. It is well to do justice to such men, not only for their own sakes, but for the benefit of posterity, and to cherish the flame of generous emulation in the hearts of men. Washington's statue is about to be erected by Congress. The gratitude and the honor of the nation demand it. Then will it be said that Congress have redeemed the recorded pledges of their illu trious predecessors, and paid due respect to the man who was "first in war, first in peace, and first in the hearts of his counbeen so recently deposited. Ballad.

Her bosom's harmless giee.

BY MRS. EMMA C. EMBURY. The maiden sate at her busy wheel, Her heart was light and free, And ever in cheerful song broke forth

Her song was in mockery of love, And oft I heard her say, 'The gathered rose and the stolen heart, Can charm but for a day." I looked on the maiden's rosy cheek, And her lip so full and bright, And I sighed to think that the traitor love, Should conquer a heart so light: But she thought not of future days of wo, While she carrolled in tones so gay :

'The gathered rose, and the stolen heart,

Can charm but for a day.' A year passed on, and again I stood By the humble cottage door; The maiden sate at her busy wheel, But her look was blithe no more : The big tear stood in her downcast eye, And with sighs I heard her say, 'The gathered rose, and the stolen heart, Can charm but for a day."

Oh! well I knew what had dimmed her eye, And made her cheek so pale; The maid had forgotten her early song, While she listened to love's soft tale. She had tasted the sweets of his poisoned cup, It had wasted her life away; And the stolen heart, like the gathered rose,
